this thesis explores the liminality between belonging and not belonging i ask questions of belonging in childhood siblinghood womanhood and motherhood and try to understand where and how these roles and relationships intersect and influence who i am becoming this thesis is organized into four sections of personal essay belonging in childhood belonging in adulthood expected belonging and belonging in motherhood some sections are currently more robust than others sections are grounded in themes of belonging adoption infertility and connection essays overlap and inter lap with each other jumping back and forth in time while simultaneously moving forward along the thread of longing and belonging my intentions for this thesis have evolved as my essays have formed and gathered themselves into this collection i began with the intent of writing this thesis as a collection of autotheoretical essays under the theme of longing and belonging with a creative critical hybridity to them as i began to write i quickly realized that the scope of the critical creative piece would neither fit into my thesis time constraints nor be necessary in order for me to accomplish what i wanted this thesis to accomplish which is to examine and question the ways that i belong in the familial relationships that have shaped me and the ways that i long to belong in the spaces that i exist in i had mistakenly been under the impression that in order for my story to be valid i needed to fit my personal narrative inside of established critical theory but as these essays unfolded i found that my stories voices were strong and could stand alone while understanding these critical theories has been important for me in order to process and fit my personal narrative into an overarching context of longing and belonging including the theories no longer feels essential in order for me to have a voice on the page this was a freeing and also terrifying realization untethering my writing from the safety of these theories has been a brave exercise in learning how to unshield my voice this is not to say that research and critical theory is absent from this thesis i have spent many hours immersing myself in the understanding of adoption theory liminality belonging ideological state apparatuses identity formation mirror stages and genetic mirroring because i did not want to fully erase the influence of these theories and theorists from my paper i have included an epigraph before each essay that gives a nod to the vast array of depth and context impacting my narrative my plan is to build off of this foundational piece and develop a memoir style compilation that will include these essays among many others i would like to take key features from the current essays in this thesis and expand them to include an in depth look at my relationship with my biological sister and how we belong to each other my identity formation as a 2nd generation adoptee and how that shaped my thinking regarding family identity and relationships my relationship with olivia s biological mom and how i belong and long to belong to her the lengths i took to attempt to belong in spaces i felt a spectator to analysis of how being in relationship with open adoption has personally evolved and changed over the course of time for me and analysis regarding the evolution of how both sides of our families have responded to and evolved with our open adoption relationship with olivia s biological family i will also include analyzing the way that i intentionally communicate about open adoption and identity specifically with my family of origin and when i intentionally choose to stay silent about my experience with adoption and listen to others voices which is an integral and essential component of belonging to the greater adoption community the process for this thesis has sometimes been painful sometimes therapeutic and always informative i sat a lot in my memories i wrote down core memories that seemed to shape the way i thought about siblinghood childhood identity womanhood and motherhood i talked with the people with whom i share these memories i had multiple long and meaningful phone conversations with my brother sister my parents my husband and olivia s biological mom that helped to give insight and dimensionality to what i remembered i was surprised to find that many of the core memories i had were just wisps of memories for others and that some of the key moments that impacted them were not even on my radar i guess that is how events are felt we can all be hit by the same experience but be impacted differently my biggest concern throughout this process has been how to stay in my lane i am painfully aware that my essays share space with the people that i love the very most in this world this may seem to walk dangerously close to an apology but i did not and do not take these shared stories lightly i worked and revised and edited and stewed and wept and wrung my hands and lost sleep over how to tell my perspective only how to write in a way that conveys my own flawed viewpoint my own unreliability my story is not the full story and the people i ve dragged into these essays may rightfully disagree with how i have portrayed events and memories i need to say this even if you don t think i need to say this i am aware that i am only one part of an experience as joan didion soberly reminds me that is one last thing to remember writers are always selling somebody out the other side of this coin is that if i do not tell these stories i am selling myself out belonging offers a fresh perspective on common grace leading us out of self destructive narcissism and into whole and healthy relationships with god and others the reality is god created us with an innate desire to belong to something more than us when we integrate our story within god s first story about us we can bravely face ourselves and discover the truth of belonging and worthiness that god has written and we start to imagine how to invite others into a greater sense of belonging the journey to finding ourselves and one another is not for the faint of heart it s messy it s hard work it s worth it we can have a front row seat to a tectonic shift not just on the surface of our lives but in places deep down inside as we recognize common grace in the beautiful and terrible parts of our lives in other words every chapter in our stories every conversation and every character is part of the way back to belonging you are invited to the very edge of your seat to anticipate what could happen in you and others if you engage with the unexpected grace that passionately declares life is not all about our pain our accomplishments our rights our abuse our power or our beliefs it is about us finding our way together it is about a supernatural interconnectedness to a deeper story that invades every nook and cranny of our lives with light and love because we belong to one another ultimately we belong to god he created us he loves us he provided the world where we live for our benefit he desires for us to be in relationship first and foremost with him and then with one another we are created in his image where if we truly examine ourselves we find that we cannot find any other way to discover our ultimate meaning and connectedness outside of being connected ultimately to god sin separates that s why god hates sin he is a relational god and he hates sin because it separates us from him the study of psychology reveals to us the need in every human being to feel connected and significant revealing that without them the ability to thrive as an individual is hampered or may not occur at all coupled with god s word and the transforming power of the holy spirit we can experience some life giving truths about our need for belonging
